This quarter’s column, just in time for summer, features an explosion of work from Patrick Carr, Dylan Moulton, and Naomi Young.

Dylan Moulton, “94 Years of Alaskan Research: A Publishers Perspective,” presented at the Alaska Library Association Annual Conference, Juneau, Alaska, February 19, 2011. This presentation outlined morphing state-wide relationships with a single publisher over nearly a century and how political and environmental events can change both research focus and output levels.

Last (alphabetically) but not least, Naomi Young is the author of the newest NASIGuide: http://www.nasig.org/files//PUBPR_NASIGuide_2011_ClassifyingNewspapers.pdf. This guide is the outgrowth of a project we did when our main library was renovated. Our public services people expressed a strong desire to have all the newspapers gathered together in a single sequence.
