Display Description

Did you know that nearly 1 in 5 people have a disability in the U.S.? According to the Census Bureau report, Americans with Disabilities: 2010, about 56.7 million American citizens have a disability. That's 19 percent of our nation's population!

There are many types of disabilities – seen and unseen. Disabilities can affect an individual's vision, movement, thinking, memory, learning, communication, hearing, mental health, and so much more! However, it is important to remember that disability does not mean inability! Disability awareness is vital to the growth of our university so our students and faculty can become even more accommodating, accepting, and understanding of the challenges students with disabilities face every day.

If you would like more information on disabilities, check out the Disabilities Display on the 4th floor of Cooper Library or contact the Tiger2Tiger Speakers Bureau – an organization of university students with disabilities that are committed to raising awareness and improving accommodations for Clemson's campus – through Clemson's Student Disability Services.
