I have today introduced a resolution calling for the formation of a Commission on Federal and State Jurisdiction. The purpose of this Commission is to study the boundaries of power between the Federal and State governments, and also the boundaries of responsibility between the legislative, executive, and judicial branches of the Federal government. The Commission is to determine where these boundaries should lie under the Constitution, and whether these boundaries have been crossed. I believe that this bipartisan Commission can do an important job for constitutional government in the United States.
